

THE INSIDER'S NEWSLETTER

JULY 20, 1964

PLEASE BURN BEFORE READING: In November, 1963, Naugatuck Chemical sent a booklet entitled Paracril Liquid Rubbers for Use as Solid Rocket Propellant Binders to about 200 U.S. newspapers and magazines, including chemical, plastics, rubber, aviation and space trade journals and such publications as Women's Wear Daily. Last month these same publications received a letter from Naugatuck Chemical: "We have recently learned that the Army Materiel Command has classified the above publication as CONFIDENTIAL information. While we expect to appeal this decision and have reasonable hope of getting it reversed, we have no alternative in the meantime but to write to all recipients of the bulletin to advise them: (1) If you have security clearance which allows you to have access to Confidential material, the bulletin should be so stamped and placed in your security file; or (2), If you do not have security clearance, we must ask you to return the bulletin to this office promptly."
